

Three Little Pigs

Three Billy
Goats Gruff

Reading Booklet

Mock Test Papers-Test2

Contents

Three little pigs Pages 4–5

Three Billy goats gruff Pages 6–7

Three Little Pigs

Once upon a time, there were three little pigs: Straw Pig, Stick Pig, and Brick Pig. Each pig wanted a cozy and safe home. Straw Pig quickly built a house made of straw, Stick Pig constructed one with sticks, and Brick Pig chose strong bricks. They were excited about their new homes, but an old and sly wolf lurked nearby, eyeing the three houses with a wicked plan.

The Wolf's Sneaky Attempts

The wolf, eager to have a tasty meal, approached the straw house first. With a huff and a puff, he blew the house down easily. Straw Pig ran to Stick Pig's house for safety, but the wolf followed. Despite being sturdier, the stick house couldn't withstand the wolf's mighty breath, and it crumbled. Panicked, the two pigs rushed to Brick Pig's house, the strongest of them all.

The Brick House Stands Strong

Brick Pig's house was solid and well-built. As the wolf approached, determined to blow this house down as well, he huffed and puffed with all his might. However, the brick house remained unshaken. The wolf, realizing he couldn't destroy this sturdy structure, attempted to trick the pigs into letting him in. But the three little pigs were clever and refused to open the door.

The Three Little Pigs Outsmart the Wolf

Realizing that he couldn't fool the pigs, the frustrated wolf had one last idea. He climbed onto the roof and tried to enter through the chimney. Little did he know, the pigs anticipated this move. They had a pot of boiling water waiting in the fireplace. As the wolf descended, he landed right into the hot water, yelping in pain. The three little pigs celebrated their victory, knowing they had outsmarted the cunning wolf.

Three Billy Goats Gruff

Once upon a hill, there were three goats: Small Goat, Middle-Sized Goat, and Big Goat. They had a tasty meadow on the other side of a bridge, but beneath it lived a grumpy troll. Small Goat, the youngest, decided to cross first. With a trip-trap, trip-trap, he bravely went. The troll asked, "Where are you going?" Small Goat said, "To the meadow to eat and get fat. Don't eat me! Wait for my bigger siblings. They're even tastier!" The troll, wanting a big meal, let Small Goat pass.

Next, Middle-Sized Goat approached the bridge. The troll asked, "Where are you going?" Middle-Sized Goat said, "To the meadow to eat and get fat. Don't eat me! Wait for my elder brother. He's even tastier!" The troll, still hungry, let Middle-Sized Goat go.

Finally, Big Goat, the eldest, approached the bridge. The troll, getting impatient, asked, "Where are you going?" Big Goat boldly declared, "To the meadow to eat and get fat. If you dare eat me, I have big and strong horns to deal with trolls like you!" Frightened by Big Goat's bravery, the troll stepped aside, and Big Goat joined his siblings in the lush meadow.

Reunited in the lush meadow, Small Goat, Middle-Sized Goat, and Big Goat celebrated their victory over the tricky troll. They feasted on the tasty grass, danced, and laughed together. The meadow was filled with joy as the three siblings played games and enjoyed the beautiful day. From that day on, they could always cross the bridge without fear, knowing that together, they were strong and clever.

End of test